TYPES OF DATA PROCESSED

Browsing data / cookies

Our company has reviewed and implements the Decision issued by the Italian Authority for personal data Protection regarding “Simplified procedures for information and acquisition of consent as regards the use of cookies” dated 8 May 2014 – [web doc no. 3118884] (Published in the Italian Official Journal no. 126 of 3 June 2014).

Cookies are small text files which the websites browsed by a user send and record on the computer or mobile device, and are then sent back to the same websites upon the next login. It is exactly because of cookies that the website can remember the user’s actions and preferences (this includes, for example, login data, language selected, character size, other display settings, etc.), which means that -when a user browses the same website later on or goes from one page to another on the same website - they do not need to be entered again. Cookies, therefore are essentially used for purposes of IT identification, monitoring of sessions and storage of information concerning user activities in the course of internet browsing; they can also include a unique identification code which makes it possible to track the user’s browsing within the website in question. While browsing a website, it is also possible that a user might be sent, on the relevant computer or mobile device, cookies from websites or servers other than the one being browsed at that specific time (aka “third party” cookies”). Finally, it is possible that some actions might not be completed without using cookies; this means that the latter – in certain instances - are technically essential for the operation of the website in question.

Below is a list of the various type of cookies available:

- Technical Cookies, i.e. browsing- or session-related, essential for the website operation or to allow users to access any contents or services which they might require.
- Cookie Analytics, allowing for an insight into how the website pages are browsed by users. These cookies do not make it possible to collect information about the user’s identity or other personal details. All information is processed in an aggregated and anonymous form.
- Functionality Cookies, i.e. those used to enable specific website functionalities and a set of selected criteria (for example language or selected products for purchase), with a view to improving the service rendered.
- Third-party Cookies, i.e. cookies from websites or servers other than the one hosting this website, used by what are known as third parties for their own purposes.
- Profiling cookies, also third party-related, that is to say cookies whose purpose is to profiling a user, which are then used for direct online mailing based on the preferences shown by the latter in the course of internet browsing.
